Fax for Libraries (Supplements to Computers in Libraries) Patrick R. Dewey

This is designed for all librarians looking to purchase a fax machine or get the best use out of a machine already installed. Summarizing the current potential of fax within the library environment, this book touches on the ways in which the fax machine has speeded up the relay of interlibrary loans and queries and lends itself to the transmission of general library information such as maps, charts, statistical reports, book pages, manuscripts and brochures. The author offers an insight into future technological developments and their application within the library environment. The text includes a directory of popular fax machines and a list of fax vendors.
