"Extra Credit," "Challenge," "Enrichment," are all words that describe the new honors materials. Thirty or more one-page lessons, with solutions, enhance the award-winning upper level material. These are designed for various students. Those who are planning on pursuing math in college, those leaning toward a career in science, as well as students who just want more math, will all benefit from the tougher problems, and the increased variety of topics. In the Honors books you will find problems which do the following: Review previously learned material in an unfamiliar context. Provide practical application of math skills relating to science or everyday life. Challenge the student with more complex word problems. Expand on concepts taught in the text. Familiarize students with problems that are present in standardized testing. Prepare for advanced science courses such as physics. Stimulate logical thinking skills with interesting or unusual math concepts.
